Algorithmic Bias on Gender

The internet is now widely considered to amplify bias, misinformation, and harassment. How can we understand these problems, and also think beyond them toward other possible internets?

Cait McKinney, an Assistant Professor at SFU, will explore this question by looking at how:

- trans and queer communities speak back to some of the most challenging aspects of contemporary online technologies: database design, privacy concerns, and content moderation
- gender is captured in technological databases
- trans and queer communities offer alternative models for thinking about technical design
- content moderation policies deal with sexual expression online

Presented in partnership with Simon Fraser University.
